

CASE OF TAX POOR TO FEED POOR SAY SOLONS

The following article on the state relief tax situation is a clipping from the Springfield, Ill., "Illinois State Journal" of May 9, sent to us by Representatives Bernice T. Van Der Vries and Frank Foster of the 7th district.

"Blame for the present crisis in the relief situation was placed upon the state and national Democratic administrations last Wednesday by Republican Floorleader, Leroy M. Green of Rockford. In a statement, Green charged that the crisis was brought about by the Democratic administration at Washington in collusion with the state Democratic administration for the purpose of passing the pending relief program.

Setting forth that Republicans are not opposed to raising the required funds needed for well-administered relief, the statement condemns the failure of the state administration to conserve the income for the last two years so that increased taxation might be avoided.

"The opponents of an increased sales tax are not opposed to raising the required sums needed for well administered relief. We are opposed to the method adopted to raise the funds. We condemn the failure of the state administration to conserve the income of the state for the last two years, so that increased taxation might be avoided.

"The present situation and apparent crisis have been deliberately brought about by the Democratic administration in charge of relief at Washington in collusion with the Democratic administration in this state for the purpose of forcing the passage of the sales tax increase bills.

"The governor's trip to Washington was not for the purpose of securing aid for Illinois' unemployed, but to make sure that Hopkins would persist in a course of coercion toward Illinois until the Governor's bills were passed.

"The sales tax increase bills, senate bill 207 and 209 were introduced in the legislature Feb. 28. After that time an adjournment of practically three weeks was taken by the Democratic organization in control of the legislature just prior to the Chicago city election. Mayor Kelly unequivocally announced himself, the week prior to that election, as opposed to the sales tax increase bills. Immediately after the election he changed his position and is now conveniently in the Hawaiian islands.

"We are opposed to a sales tax upon the necessities of life because it is unsound tax legislation, as it does not take into consideration the basic principle of sound taxation, the ability to pay. It is an inverted income tax. It is a tax upon the poor. We are opposed to the governor's program of taxing the poor to feed the poor.

"We condemn the inequality in the distribution of the relief burden among the states by the FERA, and the arbitrary and unsound method by which Illinois' allotment was placed at $3,000,000 a month. We object to an emergency tax for relief for 25% months in the future, when the direction by the federal government is to raise $3,000,000 a month, month by month.

"Ohio with a sales tax in effect 3 months has 215,000 payers. Illinois with a million greater population at the end of nearly two years, has but 115,000 sales tax payers, of whom 4,600 pay no tax, and over

Orland PTA Has Successful Year

The last meeting of the school year of the Orland Park P. T. A. was held Thursday evening, May 9. The reports of the officers and chairmen of the various standing committees showed the organization to have had a most successful and eventful year, a year of much benefit to the members, to the school and to the community. Numerically the association had the best record of the past few years; financially, the treasurer's report showed that after a considerable amount which had already been spent on school projects, there was an excellent balance on hand to continue the work; educationally, the members have had opportunity throughout the year to listen to interesting speakers, educational lectures, thought provoking papers and discussions on a variety of subjects in which a person with a sense of community and school welfare at heart was bound to be interested in and benefit therefrom; socially, the members, as well as friends of the members have been given ample opportunity to expand and enjoy themselves in communal social activity.

There have been dances, holiday observances, parties, programs and plays by the children of our school, out-of-town successful play, and refreshments galore, all of the finest and most satisfying nature that could be provided. All the activities of the association have been planned with the viewpoint of adding to the power of the public school for producing a coming citizenry which will be strong and militant and making for the present, our community a better place to live in.

Mrs. Lillian Knox, president of the association, in a short address reviewed the work of the year and expressed her thanks and appreciation to the officers, the chairmen of the committees, the membership and the friends of the association for the excellent support that had been given her and asked that the same spirit of co-operation be manifested to make the coming year even more successful.

Mrs. Charles Maddox and Mrs. Thomas Cooper who had been elected vice-president and secretary at the last meeting were formally introduced and inducted into their offices. Mrs. Harold Morlock retiring secretary was given a vote of thanks for her excellent conduct of that office for the past two years.

A motion was made to provide suitable first aid equipment for the school which was unanimously adopted. It was decided to hold a picnic at the close of the school year at which the association would be the hosts to the school children.

The program of the evening was put on by the pupils of the Primary room under the direction of Miss Ersel Kettering and was genuinely enjoyed and very interesting.

Following the meeting the chairs were cleared from the floor and the balance of the evening was given over to old fashioned dancing to the music of an accordion and drum. Refreshments in quantities helped make the evening a thoroughly enjoyable one.

Bedtime Story for Children

DANNY HAS THE SHAKES

Of all the chills of which you hear
There's no chill like the chill of fear.

DANNY MEADOW MOUSE sighed with thankfulness and relief as he reached the other side of the Laughing Brook by way of the old log which had fallen across it, thus making a bridge. To be sure he was a long, long way from his snug little home, where Nanny Meadow Mouse was anxiously waiting for him, but at least he was on the right side of the Smiling Pool and the Laughing Brook. He no longer needed to think of the Big Pickle or of Snapper the Turtle. He had left Billy Mink and Reddy Fox way back by the Smiling Pool, so he felt quite safe from them.

Of course when he should reach the edge of the Green Meadows and start across to his snug little home he would have to watch for Reddy or Old Granny Fox, but just now he felt quite safe and it was a very good feeling indeed.

Being at last on the right side of the Laughing Brook, Danny felt that he had earned a rest, but having the wisdom of long experience he first looked for a place where he could rest in safety. Just a few feet from the end of the log on which he crossed the Laughing Brook was another old log. At once Danny scampered over to it for he long ago learned that old logs are quite likely to be hollow and when they are they make the very finest retreats in all the Great World for timid little people who wish to keep out of sight.

Just as he hoped, this old log was hollow and the only entrance was through an old knot hole barely big enough for Danny to squeeze through. Making sure that no one else was there, Danny squeezed in and promptly forgot all his recent troubles and was happy, quite fortunately in the way of the little people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows.

In two minutes Danny was fast asleep. How long he slept he didn't know but suddenly he was wide awake. He heard nothing, but he had a feeling of uneasiness. He crept to the entrance and peeped out. The moonlight lay full on the old log across the Laughing Brook and even as he looked a slim dark form leaped up on the farther end and began to run swiftly across with nose close to the old log.

It was Billy Mink, and Danny knew Billy's wonderful nose had found his scent somewhere on the other bank and that it would lead Billy straight to that hollow log. And so it happened. It was scarcely a minute before Billy's nose was poked in at the knot hole and Billy took one long sniff. "Ah, ha," said Billy. "So this is where you are. Come out like a gentleman and be eaten."

SAM

By ANNE CAMPBELL

SAM is an officer walking our beat. No one could live on a quieter street.

If there were a riot, our Sammy would be quiet.

The riot, and never disturb our repose. Each child on our street when he goes to sleep, knows

He's under a special policeman's good care!

Sammy is there!

And many a child on our street when he prays

Says: "Please God, bless Sam, 'cause he has to sleep days!"

While children are sleeping, his watch he is keeping,

And sleeping is better because we have Sam.

The children sleep on if they hear a door slam.

He takes all the grief that they might have to bear!

Sammy is there!

Sometimes the dear children drift off into dreams,

And thinking of God, and of Sammy, it seems

That some one who's thinking of others, unwinking,

And thinking not once of himself, is so fine

He must have a lot in his heart that's divine.

So the children sleep tight, and the whole night is fair!

Sammy is there!

Using Cuticura

"A rash broke out on my face from some external irritation and spread very rapidly. The skin was red, and the rash burned and itched so that I scratched night and day. Then it developed into large spots or eruptions and disfigured my face."

"I tried different kinds of soaps, but had no success. I read about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and decided to send for a free sample. The result was so good that I bought more, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment the rash disappeared." (Signed) Herbert B. Skyles, R. D. 1, Vintondale, Pa.

Make You Ill

IS a constant backache keeping you miserable? Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; attacks of dizziness, rheumatic pains, swollen feet and ankles? Do you feel tired, nervous—all unstrung?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly, for functional kidney disorder permits poisons to stay in the blood and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They help the kidneys cleanse the blood of health-destroying poisonous waste. Doan's Pills are used and recommended the world over. Get them from any druggist.

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

"PUMPING" BACTERIA

PYORRHEA is a disease of the gums. Let us see what causes it, and how it infects other parts of the system.

When a new tooth erupts or "comes in" in childhood, it bursts through the mucous membrane from which it originated. The union of the mucous membrane to tooth structure is always, after the eruption of the tooth, imperfect and capable of admitting infection. This union of tooth and gum is therefore of vital interest and is called the gingival crevice or gum marginal crevice. It is much like the junction of the finger nail and skin and has a similar free margin. Its total length is about thirty inches around all the teeth. It is protected externally by a tough "pavement" or epithelium, but contains almost no epithelial (outer skin) protection at its point of union with the tooth structure.

It will therefore be seen that micro-organisms growing on the tooth's surface may readily pass into the delicate openings in the bottom of the crevice, thus gaining direct access to venules and perivascular lymph spaces in these structures, with nothing to hinder their transfer to deeper tissues by the lymph and blood streams. This process is in the majority of individuals greatly aided by the formation of calculus (tartar) or the root surface at the gum margin.

The total of masticatory pressure amounts to about one ton per day, expended by the average individual. This great force depresses the tooth into its socket about one-sixtieth of an inch on an average and the elasticity of the tissues causes a rebound. The tooth therefore acts as a piston during mastication, and where the micro-organisms lodge under the tartar and gold crowns, they are pumped directly into the unprotected blood vessels at the bottom of the crevice.

If pyorrhea has progressed long enough to produce pockets around the teeth of only one-eighth of an inch (a very shallow pocket) we thus have an ulcerating surface of three and one-quarter square inches. If pyorrhea has progressed long enough to produce pockets around the teeth of an average depth of one-quarter of an inch we have an ulcerating surface of seven and one-half square inches.

The enamel of all teeth is naturally more or less rough. Mucous plaques stick to it affording lodgment for masses of living bacteria. By being pumped directly into the blood stream they are always poisoning the system. Get into your mind this simple idea that bacteria around a tooth are not in a stagnant pocket but in a high-pressure pumping system. Then you will comprehend their danger.

ARE ALL CYLINDERS HITTING?

ARE all your cylinders hitting, or are you limping along on a few of them?

Dr. Irving Fisher of Yale has stated that there are at all times over 3,500,000 people in this country who are seriously ill. If three out of each hundred have the entire engine laid up for repairs, how many more are missing on one or more cylinders? Many of our great authorities say that there is not any one thing that is more important than the hygiene of the mouth. It is obvious, therefore, that hygiene of the mouth will prevent much of the sickness.

Many pure food laws have wisely been passed in the interest of the general public. The most important matter, however, oral hygiene, has been completely neglected. What is the use of insuring pure food if it is mixed with millions of the germs of putrefaction during mastication? It is surely, and just as thoroughly, loaded with poisons as if it has been allowed to spoil before eating.

In normal, healthy mouths are found many disease-producing germs such as those of tuberculosis, diphtheria, influenza, pneumonia and several varieties of the streptococcus and staphylococcus (the pus-producing germs). To the first named of the series are due many of the diseases of school children, while to the latter are due many of the ills of middle life.

Many times the first symptoms are hard to define. It may be that the heart action is slightly altered so that the extremities, being deprived of their full blood supply, become cold and bathed in perspiration.

Digestion becomes slow and difficult, and may be accompanied by the formation of gas which distends the stomach and intestines, causing them to press upward against the diaphragm, thus embarrassing the lungs. The bowels become constipated and the secretion of the urine is altered in quantity.

The mouth at this stage is the only organ of the body that will act as an indicator. There may be a cavity or two filled with decaying food. The X-ray may show a dead tooth or two, or it may be the gums are slightly swollen or inflamed, or careful exploration may show a few pyorrhea pockets.

If neglected, this condition is bound to change for a worse condition until one or more cylinders are missing or the entire engine is laid up for repairs.

BAPTISM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 28:19, 20;
Acts 8:26-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 28:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When People Are Baptized.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When People Are Baptized.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Be Baptized?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of Baptism.

I. The Baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:13-17).

1. His request of John (v. 13). This was in fact, if not in word. He came from Galilee to Jordan to be baptized of John.

2. John's hesitancy (v. 14). He perceived something in Jesus which impressed him with the impropriety of such an act, even moving him to hinder the execution of his demand.

3. Jesus' explanation (v. 15). He insisted upon John's compliance on the ground that it was a method of fulfilling all righteousness.

4. The heavenly acknowledgment (vv. 16, 17). As Jesus emerged from the waters of the Jordan the heavens were opened, the Holy Spirit descended, and a voice from heaven declared, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

II. Jesus Enjoins Baptism (Matt. 28:19, 20).

In Christ's commission to the apostles he imposes the following obligations:

1. To teach, to make disciples of all the nations (v. 19). They were to make known to the world that Christ had died to save sinners and that God had committed to Jesus the redemption of the world.

2. To baptize those who believed (v. 19). This is the divinely appointed way of making a public confession of faith in Christ. This baptism is to be in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, indicating that the believer has been brought into definite relationship to each member of the holy Trinity.

3. To teach the disciples obedience (v. 20). Profession is not enough. It must issue in obedience. This commission is preceded by the assurance of the divine authority of Jesus (v. 18). All authority was given him in heaven and earth and was followed by an all-sufficient promise (v. 20).

III. Baptism Practiced in the Early Church.

1. At Pentecost (Acts 2:38, 41). This was the first baptismal service in the Christian church. Multitudes were brought under conviction of sin as a result of the apostolic preaching and thousands were baptized. Baptism was administered in the name of Christ, which doubtless refers to the authority of Christ.

2. The Samaritans under the preaching of Philip (Acts 8:5-12). As a result of his preaching men and women believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. Their profession of faith was followed by baptism.

3. The eunuch (Acts 8:26-39). In the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch the Lord's work is seen broadening in its scope. The gospel was first preached to the Jews, then to the Samaritans who nationally were on the borderland between the Jews and the Gentiles. This Ethiopian was in all probability a Gentile, a proselyte to the Jewish faith. The Spirit of God called Philip away from the great work in Samaria and directed him to go near and join himself to the chariot of the Ethiopian treasurer. This providential meeting gave Philip the opportunity to preach to the Ethiopian. Philip preached to him Christ as the Savior, who through suffering and death saved from the guilt of sin. This resulted in the eunuch's request for baptism.

4. The baptism of Paul (Acts 9:18, 19). The great apostle to the Gentiles, before entering upon his work, received baptism at the hands of Ananias, who was not even himself a church official.

5. Cornelius and his household (Acts 10:47, 48). When God would send the gospel upon its world-wide conquest, he providentially brought Peter and Cornelius together. Peter preached to Cornelius the sacrificial death of Christ for sin and his triumphant resurrection. Seeing the visitation of the divine Spirit upon the Gentiles, Peter proposed baptism.

IV. The True Meaning of Baptism (Rom. 6:1-14).

Water baptism symbolizes the identification of the believer with Jesus Christ in his death and resurrection. It is the outward sign of the inner experience.

Friendship

When I see leaves drop from their trees in the beginning of autumn, just such, think I, is the friendship of the world. Whilst the sap of maintenance lasts, my friends swarm in abundance; but in the winter of my need they leave me naked.—Warwick.

Adversity

I account it a part of unhappiness not to know adversity. I judge you to be miserable. There is no one more unhappy than he who never felt adversity.—Thomas Brooks.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Probably the most notable incident of recent days in Washington is the explosion of a bomb by business. It is significant and important.

Blast at New Deal
tant that the business voice, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, has spoken in such emphatic terms about the New Deal. It is further a matter of significance that the business voice criticized the New Deal generally as well as specifically, because it is the first time in the period since President Roosevelt took charge that anything like unity in business thought has been presented.

The reaction was instantaneous. First, Secretary Roper of the Department of Commerce mustered 21 members of his business advisory committee for a counter attack. It was almost drowned out by the chamber's roar. Such was not the case, however, with the President's reply. He waited until the convention had ended to let loose a charge that the business interests were selfish. It made all the front pages.

This brings us to the crux of the condition precipitated by the outburst of the Chamber of Commerce convention. It is seldom, and I believe the record shows this statement to be absolutely true, that annual conventions of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States have been taken seriously by the newspapers. The business men have been looked upon as possessors and promoters of rather antiquated ideas. Their interests have been and are of a selfish character. That is quite obvious and quite natural. But at this time, the voice of business speaks more than just business views. It speaks politically. Hence, when business spoke this time the newspapers of the country paid heed. The result was an unprecedented amount of publicity was obtained by the chamber through the medium of its convention this year.

Whether this represents a change in the thought of the country, surely no one individual of any group is able to say definitely. It must be recognized, however, that for many months a highly vocal minority of politicians has been accusing the administration of throttling criticism. Although this group fought vigorously and charged the administration with having the greatest propaganda machine ever to exist, it obtained little publicity for those views. Most newspapers dismissed them by publication of three or four paragraphs, buried on the inside pages of the metropolitan dailies. So, necessarily, significance attaches to the fact that when the business voice was raised in apparent unity, the newspapers accorded columns of space to it. It can be construed in no other way than as meaning there is a larger opposition to some phases of the New Deal at least than most of us had expected.

For quite a while such groups as the American Liberty league have pounded away at certain phases of the New Deal. To the Washington observers it appeared that these groups were getting nowhere and getting there fast. Of a sudden, however, the voice opposed to the New Deal seems to have found itself. Certainly at the moment and for the first time, there is an approximation of unity to New Deal opposition and that fact is reflected in a rather important way. I refer to the courage exhibited in congress where there is more and more evidence of a decision on the part of the legislators to assert their independence in contradistinction to previous silent obedience to the White House.

I believe it is too early to attempt a prediction whether the Chamber of Commerce leadership will last. If I were to make an individual guess I would say that leadership of this type will crumble. That guess is predicated upon the record of the past because heretofore it has been true that business always suffered defections and presently there was bushwhacking in its own camp. Regardless of whether that condition develops again, the explosive character of the speeches in the chamber's convention have added a momentum to Roosevelt opposition which it has lacked heretofore. It is just possible, therefore, that even if business leadership fails in its efforts to curb radical tendencies among the administration group, a well knit opposition may now be developing.

Pursuing this assumption further, one hears suggestions around Washington to the effect that a genuine and basic issue for the 1936 campaign may be in the making. It would seem that Mr. Roosevelt will be forced into the position again of appealing to the forgotten man of his 1932 campaign who has since been forgotten. The conservative thought of the country meanwhile will marshal behind the home owners, the possessors of property and capital and the workers whose income must be taxed heavily in subsequent years to pay for the program of spending our way out of the depression.

Some support is seen for this theory of probable issues in 1936 in the recent statement of Postmaster General Farley who spoke politically as chairman of the Democratic national committee.

In almost so many words, Mr. Farley declared that the business interests had not been favorable to Mr. Roosevelt; that they were not now favorable to him and that there was no reason to expect the support of business hereafter. Mr. Farley, clever politician that he is, recognizes that under present conditions there are more votes on the side of the man who appeals to those who have not than there are on the side of the man who appeals to those who have.

On the other hand, government statistics show that something like 65,000,000 persons hold life insurance policies; that something like 20,000,000 have saving accounts in banks; that there are around 10,000,000 home owners in the nation, and that even at the lowest point of the depression there were more people working for salaries and wages than there were unemployed. Mr. Farley's guess apparently is that so many of these workers have had their incomes reduced that they will support a candidate who promises to improve their condition. In their numbers lies the difference between victory and defeat.

In addition to these factors, there is to be considered the probability of defections caused by such demagogic leadership, as the Longs and the Coughlins. Saneer thinking people know, of course, that the programs which Senator Long and Father Coughlin have been preaching far and wide are as impossible of fulfillment as was the EPIC program advanced by Upton Sinclair in his California campaign. But it may not be overlooked that these men can and will pull together several million voters.

NRA the Hot Spot

No discussion of the controversy between business and President Roosevelt would be complete without consideration of the NRA. It is the hottest spot in congress right now. The situation is of such a character as to be comparable to a carbuncle on your neck. Those who have had carbuncles will fully understand.

A few days ago, Mr. Roosevelt called the most obstreperous of opposition senators to the White House for a conference on the question of what to do about extending the national industrial recovery act. It is due to expire by limitation of law on June 16. He cleverly invited Miss Perkins, the secretary of labor, and Donald Richberg, the guiding hand of the Recovery administration, to sit in on that meeting. It was only natural that two such avid New Dealers as Miss Perkins and Mr. Richberg should hold out for continuation of NRA for a two-year period. And it was only natural for senators who do not believe wholeheartedly in all of the NRA principles to insist on a makeshift, or temporary continuation. The President put them into a cockpit to fight it out. The resulting disagreement was perfectly logical but the President had put himself in a position to trade with congress.

Since the NRA opponents in congress did not yield, they naturally went back to the Capitol and framed their own program. They propose to have NRA continued, with some of its unsatisfactory features eliminated, to April of next year. They probably will be able to muster enough support to pass some such legislation. If they do, the President will accept it. Actually, he has no choice. He cannot allow the policy represented by NRA to crash completely. It would mean a political defeat which the President, strong as he is, probably could not withstand.

It is a wiser and sadder Blue Eagle that is proposed in the senate resolution continuing NRA.

Wiser Blue Eagle
That resolution is equipped with scissors to trim the tail feathers of the famed eagle so that it cannot operate against businesses whose traffic is wholly within a state—intrastate—nor will it permit price fixing.

The senate finance committee which drafted this resolution reported it to the senate by the overwhelming vote of sixteen to three. That shows better than any words of mine how thoroughly determined that senate group was to override the Richberg-Perkins views on administration policy. Succinctly, the continuing resolution provides for changes in the current law as follows:

1. No price fixing shall be permitted or sanctioned under any code except in codes covering mineral or natural resources industries that now embody the price fixing principle.

2. No trade engaged wholly in intrastate commerce shall be placed under code.

3. The President will have 30 days in which to review present codes of fair practice in order to revise and adjust each so that it will conform to the provisions of the new NRA.

"I think this is the best way out," said Senator Harrison, Democrat of Mississippi, chairman of the committee. "I feel certain we can pass this resolution without a great amount of debate and it will give NRA time to adjust itself and give the courts time to rule on the various questions of NRA validity."

HAVE A HOUSEHOLD PET

Variety and originality in pets add charm and interest to stock-raising on a miniature scale, which no child can resist and none should miss. Although the size of the animal adapted to join the family life is necessarily reduced by the more limited space in modern homes and the general absence of the family barn of a few generations ago, nevertheless there is, in every household, room for a bird or one of the smaller animals. The tender care and responsibility assumed by the children for these little creatures is an invaluable adjunct in developing the finest qualities of character which come to the strong in protecting the weak.—The Parents' Magazine.

WORRY CAUSES ACIDITY

FOR a year I've had plenty of worries. I had little appetite, no zest for work and for months I scarcely slept a wink. My physician told me that constant worry had set up an acid condition in my system which, in turn, caused sleeplessness, loss of appetite and stomach "nerves."

He recommended MILNESIA Wafers to neutralize the acids and they certainly did the trick. I still have to worry about my business but not about my health.

MILNESIA Wafers neutralize the excess acids that cause indigestion, heartburn and sick headaches. Each wafer is a full adult dose, children—one-quarter to one-half. Pleasant to take. Recommended by thousands of physicians. At all good druggists.

Mrs. Lester N. Stoltenberg,
Publicity Chairman

On May 8, the Tinley Park Unit held their regular meeting and also observed "Mother's Day." The meeting was brought to order by president, Mrs. A. Felton and 33 members answered the roll call which was read by the secretary, Mrs. Francis Rowden.

The committee reports were briefly made owing to the entertainment arranged for the Mothers, which were present.

Mrs. H. Freitag, Americanism chairman who was in charge of the program, had the members of the Unit introduce their mother or the mother which they acquired for the evening, to the assembly. Songs were beautifully rendered to the mothers by Mrs. F. Ceithaml and Mrs. H. Freitag, accompanied by Mrs. Baldwin.

Mrs. T. Swisher read them a poem. A skit entitled, "The Bamboozledike Chair" was presented by Mrs. M. Brandau. Mrs. M. West, Mrs. E. Baldwin, Mrs. Nelson and Mrs. T. Swisher as coach. This completed the entertainment after which refreshments were served.

The table was beautifully decorated and each member and guest received a corsage of tea roses made by Mrs. H. Berg. Each member presented their mother with a gift as they read a short verse, in honor of the "Day."

Games were played and prizes awarded. A very enjoyable evening was spent and appreciated by all. The hour was late but everybody left for home just a little bit happier.

From Small Beginnings

As the acorn develops into the oak so, in time, modest savings and profits made through use of the farm telephone may grow into a sum far greater than the small cost of the service. A few cents saved here when the telephone runs an errand for you, a dollar or two gained there when the telephone helps you market to good advantage—and soon the telephone is showing a profit. A single call has been known to be worth more than the farmer paid for his service over many years. But it is not the extraordinary call that recommends the farm telephone so much as the everyday use of the service for routine farm business and the convenience and satisfaction it means to the farm home. The many time-saving, money-saving and effort-saving jobs it does make it worth far more than it costs. And it works for small pay.

JUST A TRUNKFUL!

THREE smiling young stowaways demonstrate the ample space available for luggage, golf clubs or trophies of a shopping expedition, found in the trunk compartment of the new Ford V-8 Touring Sedans, two of the new de luxe types recently announced by the Ford Motor Company. The trunk compartment—with 13 cubic feet of space—is an inherent part of the design of the Tudor and Fordor Touring Sedan body types. All the space is used for luggage, the spare tire being carried conventionally at the rear, while an inner compartment under the floor provides space for tools. The trunk compartments may be locked with the same key that fits the tire lock. The new touring sedans were designed to provide ample luggage carrying facilities for families doing extensive traveling who wish to utilize the car interior for passengers. They have proved thus far to be among the most popular Ford body types.

Great Writer's Idea

Solomon's proverbs, I think, have admitted to say that as the sore palate findeth grit, so an uneasy conscience heareth innuendoes.—George Elliot.

DESCRIBES PLAN FOR STEPPING UP COWS' NET PROFIT

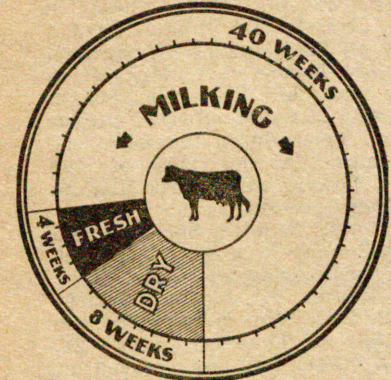

The "ounce of prevention" is at last being applied successfully to the control of costly cow troubles, according to D. H. Van Pelt, noted authority on Dairying. "Calving difficulties, retained afterbirth, breeding failures, congested udders, lost quarters—all familiar ailments existing in many herds today—can now be just as easily and economically prevented as they have here-to-fore been grudgingly and expensively tolerated," says Van Pelt.

"These unprofitable factors, dairymen readily admit, are the biggest reason why money is lost in handling cows," Van Pelt says. "Take, for example, any one of those trouble makers—such as retained afterbirth—and see just how that affects the condition and producing ability of the cow."

Production Off 30 to 35%
"The energy a cow expends at the time of calving, is energy that is entirely wasted as far as milk production in her lactation period is concerned. If she retains her afterbirth and has to be cleaned, she is off from 30 to 35% in her milk production. That cuts into the profits. As another example, there is udder congestion. Every time a cow has trouble with her udder a pronounced falling off in milk results. That's another loss."

"An unfortunate thing about cow troubles is that always it is the better cows which are afflicted—always the best and highest producers. The reason for this is that the loafers or boarders in the herd are not working hard enough to be afflicted with such disturbances. It's the best milkers that fall prey to them."

"The underlying cause of these cow troubles can be summed up in two words—'inside tear-down'—an unprofitable condition which is due to lack of proper handling of the cow throughout the whole cycle of production and reproduction. In every year of a cow's life there are three distinct periods—the eight weeks just before calving when she should be dry, the four weeks of adjustment after calving, and the forty weeks of maximum milking. It is now known by experience and experiment that in each of these periods, cows require different handling and feeding. When this fact is recognized and followed according to a proven program that's best adapted to each of these periods, the cows will keep in better condition, inside and out, and will not only produce milk more efficiently but will have built up within themselves a powerful resistance to the ordinary diseases and infections that are common in so many herds.

"But why a different plan for each of these periods in the year's production cycle, is the question frequently asked. The answer is simple, once the problem is stated. First of all, what must a cow do during the eight weeks just before freshening? She must build the unborn calf—over 62% of the calf is developed in those eight weeks just before freshening. Then she must get herself in condition for normal calving. And finally, she must develop a reserve on which she can draw during her following lactation period. This all means getting in shape so that she will have a strong, healthy udder. These are all big jobs that must be provided for in the feeding of the cow."

"After calving a new picture is presented. The minute a cow freshens or drops her calf she must be given at least four weeks to recover from the strain of calving and get properly adjusted for milking. Her blood stream has to change its flow from the foetus to the mammary system, a major adjustment. During the adjustment period, production must not be forced by changing too quickly to a milk stimulating feed—or the cow will be thrown off her stride before her full strength has been restored and her digestive system has a chance to accept the heavier load. She needs a feed that is especially palatable because she hasn't a particular edge on her appetite and doesn't feel much like eating. The feed should also be sufficiently laxative to work the feverish condition out of her. Then, too, it must be easily digested and strengthening."

For Highest Production
"Clearly then there is a vast difference in the cow's requirements in feed and handling between the dry and adjustment periods. By recognizing these vital distinctions and acting accordingly, any dairyman can easily put his cows in shape for the third period—40 weeks of heavy, profitable milking. In coming into the milking cycle there must be a gradual change to a milking ration. This ration must be balanced and blended to get the cow milking at her best, maintain a steady milk level, and make the most yearly net profit per cow. More than that the feed must furnish her everything necessary in proteins, carbohydrates, and mineral matter so that the cow can keep her self in good shape for many years to come. A proven cow program for accomplishing this can be secured by writing Purina Mills, Educational Division, St. Louis, Mo., and asking for their bulletin, 'Profitable Cows'."

Clean Electric Bulbs
The dry dust and dirt that accumulates on electric lamp bulbs and inside electric lighting fixtures often causes a decrease of illuminating value of 30 per cent within three months and where soot and oily dust are found the results are even worse. Therefore, all electric lamp bulbs and fixtures should be cleaned thoroughly and regularly.

Sportsmanship Award at Annual 500-Mile Race Inspired By Driver of Flaming Car

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—The driver of a flaming car which might have headed into the grand stands is responsible for one of the most coveted and unusual awards made yearly at the 500-mile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway May 30—the Sportsmanship Trophy.

In 1927 the car which the late Norman Batten was driving caught fire as it came into the back stretch. Batten cut his power and applied the brakes to slow it down and then remained aboard, foot resting on the rear axle, until it came to a dead stop. He was severely burned, as the above picture shows. A collection was taken on the grounds and he was awarded the purse for his courage which was to be put to the supreme test a year later when he surrendered his seat in a life boat to a woman passenger and perished in the sinking of the S. S. Vestris. The award became a permanent fixture after the 1927 race.

Ira Hall won it in 1933 when he pinned his wrecked car to the upper wall with his shoulders and held it there for ten minutes, preventing it from rolling down into the swift moving traffic.

Gene Haustein won it last year when he sacrificed his chances in the race and crashed attempting to miss another car spinning on the track.

SELF-FED CALVES DO BETTER THAN PAIL FED STOCK

Why does the calf that runs with the cow develop faster than the calf that is pail fed? Dairymen and livestock men will admit this to be a fact—but why it is so has never been definitely settled.

Some new light has apparently been thrown on the subject by Purina Mills' Experimental Farm at Gray Summit, Missouri. There it has been found that calves which are self fed on a feed in compressed checker form do much better than calves which receive exactly the same feed in the form of gruel. When the calves are self fed they eat a few bites now and then throughout the day. This evidently results in a more thorough mixing of the food with saliva and has its effect on making digestion easier than is possible with pail feeding. With pail feeding, the calf is inclined to gulp its feed in too large a quantity at one time to be handled efficiently by the digestive system. Digestion, it appears from the experimental findings, is not burdened where small amounts of food are taken in from time to time on the self feeding plan, as much as it is when the day's ration is divided into two pail feedings.

The More Natural Way
The fact that this experiment was run on identical feeds, differing only in form, and that the evidence was overwhelmingly in favor of the system where the calf ate little at a time but ate that little often, would make it apparent that feeding calf meal in compressed checker form is the more natural way of raising calves. Like teaching a calf to drink out of a pail, at first the calf must be taught to eat Calf Chow Checkers. This is done by holding a checker in the calf's mouth until she gets the taste of it, and repeating for a few days until she learns.

For the first month, milk is fed twice a day in limited quantities. Hay, grain, salt, and water, as well as calf checkers, are kept before the calf. The plan is really very simple and eliminates all of the work of mixing gruels and washing buckets. After thirty days, all that's necessary is to keep the feed boxes from becoming empty.

Because of Calf Chow Checkers being comparatively a new idea in raising calves, every feed store handling Checkerboard feeds invites dairymen to come in and examine them, and to get a copy of the feeding directions.

Ex-Coast Champ Plans Assault On Race Jinx

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Al Gordon, the careening Californian, a three-lap man in 1932, got his record up to 66 laps last year in the 500-mile Indianapolis Motor Speedway classic. But this year he'll be back on Decoration Day with the idea of staying in for the finish.

The handsome, Pacific coast speedster, has sneered himself with California glory and victories for the past year or two and will bring back to the time worn bricks of the Indianapolis track, a more rounded and seasoned experience than when he made his debut in 1932.

Al had a little difficulty that year that put him out after three short turns around. He made the simple mistake of being on the outside at the turn when there were five cars abreast. Al forgot to remember there'd be only room for four and the outside man always runs out of track.

This year he will drive a car for a fellow Californian, Bill White, well known sportsman and a familiar figure at the big time in Indianapolis. Gordon was Pacific coast champion last year, qualified his car at 116 miles an hour and was running in second place at the end of 150 miles when he skidded into the wall and wrecked his steering rod and all chance for victory.

Ran In Second Gear In Annual 500-Miler

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—A capable driver once drove part of the 500-mile race in second gear—but it was in error.

It was Rex Mays, dashing California youth, whose face was made red by this unique mechanical difficulty. Mays has again entered the Decoration Day competition to be held at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway May 30.

Mays was elected to drive one of the three cars entered by Fred Frame, 1932 winner, last year. He broke a front axle on the northwest turn at the 135 mile marker and came back to the pits to watch the other boys go. Frank Brisco, who had set a hot pace to lead the early race, called for a relief driver at 225 miles and Mays was selected to drive.

The car was a four-wheel-drive mount of unusual design but fast as lightning. Mays could not seem to get the speed of which the car was capable. After running eight laps he reported back to the pits where it was discovered that, unfamiliar with the shift, he had been running in second gear.

Mays was again one of the sensations of the Pacific Coast during the winter.

Crossed Signals Earn Pole Place for Racer

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Misread pit signals gave Kelly Pettillo the pole position in last year's race and caused him to turn one of the fastest laps ever driven in qualifying.

Pettillo, with a new car, will again compete in the annual 500-mile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway May 30.

When Pettillo started his qualifying laps last year he thought he had a definite understanding with his pit crew for signals giving him his time at the end of each lap. He wanted his information in lapsed time, that is the time it required to turn the two-and-a-half mile circuit. The pits understood they were to flash his time in miles-per-hour which is a horse of an entirely different color.

When Kelly completed his first lap, the time on the board registered 1-14, meaning that it required one minute and 14 seconds for him to complete the circuit. Kelly read it 114 miles per hour when in reality he had turned the track at 120 miles per hour. Kelly stepped on it, and running faster, his lapsed time signal on his third lap was one minute 13 seconds which Kelly read 113 miles an hour while he was really turning 122 miles an hour. It was necessary to put up a big "Slow" warning before the frantic little Italian realized that he was increasing his speed every lap and an easy winner of the No. 1 qualifying position. He averaged 119 miles per hour for the 25-mile run.

FIRST GLIMPSE OF U. OF I. MAKES NEW SUPPORTERS

Visitors Quick to Sense Value of Schools' Many Services.

Their first introduction to the University of Illinois "gets" most people. Usually the citizen's first trip to the University or his first close contact with its work is all that is necessary to make him a staunch supporter of the institution.

A typical example of this is found in the case of C. J. Simmons, a Jo Daviess county farmer living near Stockton, and the present holder of the "corn king" title of the state. This honor became his when he won the grand championship on his ten-acre sample of corn in the seed grain and corn show held in connection with the last Farm and Home Week at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

Previous to attending this year's Farm and Home Week, Mr. Simmons had never visited the University and its agricultural college, although he is forty-eight years old, was born and reared in Jo Daviess county and has been farming there ever since.

"University Making Good"

He was so surprised and impressed with his first visit that after he returned home, he wrote to the college officials as follows:

"Thanks very much for all the kindness shown me while on my visit to the University."

"After meeting such a fine group of helpful, honest, ambitious leaders, I can well understand why the University and its graduates are making good all over the United States."

Mr. Simmons' experiences and reactions are not unusual. Just recently, for instance, the College of Agriculture held its first land appraisal program for farm real estate brokers of the state. Since it was the first time that such a specialized program had been held by the University for farm land dealers, naturally many of them gained a new insight into the work of the institution.

Storehouse for Facts

"I never realized before," one of the farm real estate brokers from southern Illinois said, "just how much valuable information is available at this institution on farm land values and the many complicated problems of land economics. In fact, I have learned that this school has more information on farm real estate values than any other institution in the country."

Thus the University is serving an ever widening circle of interests and is constantly being called upon to seek out, teach and distribute more and more facts.

Close contact with the University has become so valuable to many individuals and organizations that they regularly come to the institution annually or more often. From the field of agriculture, alone, for instance, several thousand farm men and women annually come to the College of Agriculture for Farm and Home Week. How highly this meeting is valued by farm folks is shown in the statement of Paul D. Thompson, a Peoria county farmer living near Elmwood.

"In general," he said, "most people do not know what they are missing in the way of a week that can be well spent so far as education and entertainment are concerned. The week to which I refer is the annual Farm and Home Week at the University of Illinois. I was glad this year to be among the visitors from Peoria county for the first time."

"This is one week which in the future I want to attend every year, because it deals with the problems we all meet every day."

Helps Home Maker, Too.

Mrs. H. M. McDonald, also of Peoria county, spoke for the women visitors when she said, "What a wonderful privilege we farm folks have in being allowed to visit our own University of Illinois during Farm and Home Week."

"Only an attendance at one of these meetings can give anyone an idea of what our University is doing for farm women." Thousands of other citizens maintain

Meyer May Become Three Time Winner

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Track history lies within the grasp of the smooth, calm driving of Louis Meyer. Louis, who won the annual 500-mile competition in 1928 and 1933, may become the only man to win the Decoration Day Classic three times. Meyer will drive over the Indianapolis Motor Speedway here again on May 30.

Only one other man was offered this opportunity. He was the famous Tommy Milton, winner in 1921 and 1923, who retired from active racing before he reached the coveted goal.

Meyer came out of obscurity to win the 1928 race after a pal had pawned a garage to buy the car which turned up winner. Since then he has been one of the most consistent drivers on the track and many proclaim him a second Milton, thoroughly capable of making it a third victory this time.

Prizes Awarded to Women's Clubs on Scrap Books

By Mrs. R. Harrop, Third District Press and Publicity Chairman

Mrs. Arthur Kasehagen, chairman of the department of public welfare of the Third Congressional District, will hold a meeting with all public welfare chairmen of the clubs of the district at 1:30 p. m. on Tuesday, May 21st, at her home, 9338 Aberdeen St. Mrs. Kasehagen is calling this meeting to discuss a ways and means to assist in the financing of the occupational therapy project in the Oak Forest Infirmary, the pet project of her department and which was consummated last club year. The project has grown out of bounds and it is necessary to plan new methods of financing.

"The press and publicity department of the Third Congressional District, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Robert G. Harrop, conducted a scrap book contest among the press and publicity chairmen of the clubs of the district again this year. The response was very gratifying. All entries have been on exhibition in the scrap book room at the Sherman Hotel during the State Convention this past week.

The judges in the contest were Mrs. Reid M. Bennett, former president of the Beverly Hills Woman's Club, and Mr. Allan H. Armstrong, editor of the Weekly Review, with Mrs. Milton Cruse, retiring president of the Third Congressional District, acting in an advisory capacity. The rules of the district contest coincided with those of the state contest and the winners of the various groups were entered in the state contest.

There were three groups among the senior club contributions, books from clubs of membership of 125 and up; books from clubs of membership of 50 to 125 and books from clubs of membership of less than 50.

In the first group, the award was given to the scrap book of the Hamilton Park Woman's Club compiled by Mrs. Norman F. Allemeier, the second award to that of the Englewood Woman's Club, compiled by Mrs. Caleb Schurman.

In the second group, the first award was given to the scrap book of the Midlothian Woman's Club, compiled by Mrs. Roy Andrew. There was no second award.

In the third group, the first award was given to the scrap book of the Tinley Park Woman's Club, compiled by Mrs. Wm. Semmler. There was no second award.

The juniors of the district had a separate contest with the same judges, however.

The first award was given to the scrap book of the Junior Auxiliary

Getting Rid of Food Fads

Getting rid of food fads that are false, foolish or half true, will help Will county families keep down living costs in the face of rising prices, says L. W. Braham. Facts instead of fads allow the homemaker to plan and buy economically and to save food which might otherwise be wasted.

There is no reason for throwing away food that is left in opened tins. If properly refrigerated, it will keep just as well as any other cooked food, according to information from Glenna Henderson, extension specialist in foods at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.

Another expensive fallacy is that special foods are needed to supply sufficient roughage. Tests have shown that fresh fruits and vegetables normally supply plenty of roughage for the average individual. Too much roughage irritates the digestive tract. A doctor should be consulted before special preparations are used.

While raisins do contain iron, there is more of it weight for weight in meat and spinach, and these foods are usually a cheaper source of this mineral. Thus, the use of abnormally large amounts of raisins is expensive and needless. They are recommended for use in normal amounts as a fruit, but not as the chief source of iron.

Aluminum cooking utensils are perfectly safe even though small amounts of the metal may dissolve in the cooking food. Tomatoes may brighten aluminum, or spinach left standing in the utensil may darken it, but the food is not injured in either case, says Miss Henderson.

Ice cream and sea foods form a perfectly healthful combination if they are both in good condition. Fish is an excellent protein food which may be substituted for meat to vary the diet, or to cut expenses when meat is high priced.

The combination of acid fruits and milk shouldn't produce unpleasant effects, even though the fruit does curdle the milk. The gastric juices of the stomach curdle the milk anyway and the combination of milk and acid fruits makes a better curd, more easily digested.

A thorough knowledge of foods and balanced diets will be of help in promoting the health of the family and keeping down food costs, according to Miss Henderson. This knowledge will also protect the homemaker from the whims of food fads.

Side Lights On Springfield

On January 11, when $9,000,000 in emergency appropriations was voted for relief, members of the House declared that no further appropriations should be passed until a definite effort was made to cut relief costs.

On February 27, when the bills calling for tax increases were introduced the Republican members served notice that the State Budget for the coming biennium then several weeks overdue (the statute provides for submission of the budget one month after the convening of the Assembly) should be placed on the desks of the members for study before any taxes were raised.

All revenue measures were halted after their introduction by the pronouncement of Mayor Kelly, who prior to the April election publicly announced that he was not in favor of the increased taxes as provided in the bills introduced.

Thus, bills introduced in February were allowed to remain on the calendar without a discussion until after the Chicago election, when they were called for passage and were defeated in the House on April 11. The bills were then taken up in the Senate and last week were passed by that body.

About two weeks ago a sketch of a budget was submitted to the members of the Assembly. In the experience of those who have served before, this was the first time that an itemized budget had been withheld. Even the present administration fulfilled these requirements two years ago.

In Washington last week the Governor of the sovereign state of Illinois had to subject himself to the position of a beggar for funds which rightfully belong to the people of Illinois. The Governor also had to resort to pictures of dire events in case relief was withheld by the Legislature.

Many are questioning as to (1) why funds are not available from the 2% occupational tax for the necessities of those on relief, (2) why April 30, with nearly four months of the session passed, was the time to actually tackle relief problems, (3) does the Federal Government have the right to refuse aid to a state which has contributed so heavily toward relief, when some states have given practically nothing, (4) why does the Federal Relief Administrator insist upon new tax money instead of funds gathered by economies in already existing tax sources.

In fairness to those on relief it should be stated that the majority of them are loyal patriotic citizens who are unwilling to cause trouble, and are looking forward to getting back into regular employment and thus relieve the State of the burden of continuously making provisions for them.

School bills introduced by Representatives Foster and Van der Vries were passed by the House on Wednesday with practically no opposition. House Bill 260 by Mr. Foster provided a "Working cash fund for schools" and House Bills 198 and 199 by Mrs. Van der Vries authorized school districts to fund teachers orders and other claims into bonds. All bills were sponsored by the Illinois State School Board Association.

A bill introduced by Representative Frank Ring of the 7th District was also passed on Wednesday. This was House Bill 86 which provided that no license for marriage shall be issued except between the hours of eight in the morning and six in the evening, nor shall any be issued on Sundays or legal holidays. After considerable merriment the house settled down to the serious consideration which the bill deserved and passed the bill with a good vote.

Poor Being Taxed

12,000 pay less than $1. An efficient administration of the present sales tax, without fear or favor, would increase its returns by possibly 50 percent.

"The state, if properly managed, should have a sufficient balance on hand to meet this emergency. The present administration had a 50-cent property tax rate for its use in 1933 which was a 30 per cent higher rate than had ever previously existed. The statement of the department of finance, issued under the date of Feb. 4, 1935 says, 'The governor pointed out that the total ($7,658,915.06 liquor revenue) collected for the year approximately the shrinkage which has occurred in the average yearly income received in the past years from insurance, corporation taxes, Illinois Central railroad, the state inheritance tax, and various other departmental fees and earnings.'

"The sales tax, inefficiently administered as it is, will have produced by July 1, 1935, for its first two years, $77,000,000, only $17,000,000 of which was used for relief purposes. The average property tax collected for state purposes, over its last ten years, was $23,000,000 a year or $46,000,000 for the biennium, so that the income from the sales tax replacement was $14,000,000 in cash greater than the property tax it replaced. If the reduction in the state's expenses, of 25 per cent, had been made by the Democratic administration there should be a surplus now of many millions of dollars. Instead there was apparently only $9,000,000 and that, due to the failure of the administration to pay $7,000,000 of the current biennium school appropriation, and $533,000 to the blind pension.

"Neither the FERA nor the state administration has co-operated in an effort to secure a more efficient and economical administration of relief, which in March, 1933, cost $5,000,000, and the estimate for May, 1935, is $14,500,000. The relief commission had 1,400 employees in March 1932, 3,300 in February, 1933, and 9,800 by its last published report. The FERA has made its first move toward purging the rolls of persons who do not properly belong on them, since this assembly has held up the present tax increase bills.

"The incomplete and inefficient budget submitted by the state administration, after violating the law for over two months by refusal to submit a budget, and giving only totals, asks for approximately $288,000,000 for the next biennium. No part of this estimate of $288,000,000 has been itemized. The appropriation bills are not in. It is our belief that this budget, which is $18,000,000 in excess of the budgets for both the years 1925 and 1927, the peak years of prosperity could be sufficiently reduced to free all needed funds for relief without additional taxation.

"The Democratic administration has the votes and has had them for a month to put this tax into effect from July 1, 1935 to July 1, 1937. There ought to be a balance in the general fund to meet the present emergency, month to month. Why this demand for 102 votes to keep the tax in effect 25½ months? The answer is that the Democratic administration knows that the tax is an unfair and unpopular tax; that it is opposed by those who are upon the relief rolls themselves, who have protested before this legislature against the tax; that it is opposed by the working element still employed and struggling to keep off the relief rolls as placing upon them an undue burden; that it is opposed by every fair-minded student of taxation; that it is advocated only by wealthy individuals and corporations who seek to saddle their proper tax obligations upon the masses of the public who are least able to bear them.

"The Democratic administration seeks to force enough Republicans to vote for this unfair and unpopular measure so that they may claim that it is a bi-partisan, nonpolitical enactment and dodge the responsibility which properly should be placed upon their shoulders. This is why they demand the tax with the Republicans for 25½ months, instead of taking it with their own votes for 24 months.

"We, who are opposing this sales tax increase, are willing to vote today for a sufficient appropriation from the general funds which, while it might reduce that fund to the point that the governor might have to lay off some of his numerous pay-rollers, yet is sufficient to meet the emergency for two months, but such a bill will not be permitted by the administration to come to a vote. Senate bill 211, which made such an appropriation of $7,500,000 from the general funds, which has already passed the senate and is now on third reading in the house, was deliberately amended last Wednesday so that the present temporary emergency funds should not be paid out of the general state funds, thus, shutting off the only opportunity of meeting immediately the coercive demands of the FERA."

GOLDEN DAWN

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outside the doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Nance escapes, although shot, and goes to Lanny's apartment, from which, by McNamara's orders, she is removed to the chief's home. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that Nance's real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that she is heiress to $750,000. Fearful of McNamara, in his official capacity, Nance flees. Lanny finds her in her apartment, sound asleep, curled up on the guest-room bed.

"Did your men scout the street in front of this house before pulling up in front of it?" asked McNamara sharply.

"Certainly. We circled the block twice."

"Feed our Nance, Lanny," McNamara urged happily. "She's a smart girl. How's the shoulder, dearie?"

"Fine. It'll be O. K. in another week."

"So am I." Mr. McNamara grinned horribly. "Flynn's home eating his dinner now, and Angelotti must be on guard in that alley. I'm going to mistake Angelotti for a suspicious character, lurking there in the dark—and put a mark on him so I can recognize him later. He just can't stand to mix it with me, and get recognized, of course, so when he runs I'll fire in the air. He'll know who I am but he'll never suspect I know who he is."

McNamara bade Nance, Lanny and Stephen goodnight and hurried away in a taxi. A block from his home he alighted and walked down the side of the street opposite his own house. He was whistling softly as he came abreast of Angelotti's hiding place, where he turned at right angles, apparently with the intention of crossing in the middle of the street to his own house. A step from the curb he halted, turned, bent his head in a listening attitude, then stepped resolutely into the alley.

"Who's there?" he demanded. Receiving no answer, he got out a small flashlight; he seemed to have some difficulty flashing it on, for he cursed softly, and suddenly a beam from the flashlight illuminated his own face for an instant, but long enough, he decided, to permit the watchful Angelotti to recognize him. The alley was empty, but in a little garden strip a large syringa bush grew, and instinct warned the chief that his prey was behind it. So he walked past it, his flashlight held close to the bush, and as he had anticipated, it was snatched from him. As he turned, one of his stout legs was jerked from under him by a man crouching low; so, before permitting himself to topple backward, McNamara dropped his good right arm to the level of his knee and swung a short, stabbing punch. He felt a cheekbone and the side of a nose; so he punched again, a little higher up, and then fell over backward. Instantly his assailant rose and fled like a doe.

"Halt! I'm an officer," McNamara shouted, and fired into the air. But the running man did not even hesitate. In the morning he sent for Angelotti for a report on a certain case, and was charmed to note a faintly lemonish spot on the Italian's left cheek and a very noticeable iridescence under the left eye. The chief grinned. "What does the other fellow look like, Angie?" he queried innocently. "He couldn't have been more'n a flyweight or he'd have done more damage! How come you let some runt one-two you like that?"

"It was a dame I picked up for drunkenness," Angelotti lied with the glibness of long practice.

Following some discussion of the report, McNamara dismissed him, and sat down to decide what to do with Nance Belden. That Flynn and Angelotti were keeping his house under surveillance he knew now; undoubtedly they would enter his house at the earliest favorable opportunity.

The chief wondered what he would do if he stood in the shoes of his two detectives. "I'd wait for a night when I wouldn't be disturbed for a couple of hours," he decided. "What night would that be? Why, Thursday night, when the board of police commissioners meet and I am in attendance there. Stephen will make his usual early evening call—and as soon as he leaves the house those two will slip into it. The cellar door, of course. I'll make it easy for them. I'll leave the door unlocked."

He concluded that until then, Nance would be safe at Lanny's house. In the meantime, however, he must arrange to get her out of the city at an early date. The detectives were both absolutely satisfied Lanny had once given Nance sanctuary for a brief period; trust them, therefore, to keep an eye on Lanny's house.

He had in his office a telephone line that did not connect with the private exchange system in the central station, so he called Lanny on his phone at Doctor Burt's office now.

"Dan speaking, Lanny. Tomorrow morning you had better buy our pet nuisance a lot of clothes, so she'll be all ready to get out of town when I send for her. I think I'll have to fly her out and down to Tia Juana, Lower California."

"What will she do there?"

"I don't know. We'll think about that when she gets there. At least my two dicks won't be there and Tia Juana is one place where that saddle nose of hers won't surprise anybody. And when she acts rough and tough in Tia Juana nobody will pay any attention to her. They have experts down there in that line."

"I'll think that Tia Juana stunt over," Lanny decided. "It has possibilities. Is there a good hospital there?"

"I don't think so. Why?"

"You numbskull, Dan McNamara! We have to find a quiet hospital where we can have her poor nose operated on."

"Well, if we can get her beeper restored and change that black bob of hers to a movie-tone gold, she could take Flynn and Angelotti out to dinner and they'd never suspect her."

"Stevie says her nose must be operated on first. Her present state of dissociated personality probably started in an inferiority complex, and the inferiority complex probably arose out of the knowledge that her nose made her unlovely. When it's safe to bring her back to this city, Stevie will take her soul out and look at it, dust it off, put it back and do a Little Jack Horner."

"Can he do that?" McNamara's heavy voice was freighted with awe.

"He can, provided he can find a starting point for his investigation into her past life. There is always a reason for a dissociated personality. The ground for the mental shock that causes it is usually prepared long before the psychosis occurs. Rebellious thoughts, unhappiness, brooding—all these eventually have a serious effect upon sensitive and highly intelligent people and particularly, women of the hysterical type."

"All women are hysterical," McNamara said with conviction.

"You're a dear booby, Dan. Eight women out of ten can throw a fit of hysterics as easily as you'd break an egg, particularly if there is a man to be impressed. They never simulate hysterics to impress a woman, however, because they know better. However, there are women who have hysterics that are real, but it has been the experience of this office that most of these are just a trifle balmy—neurotics."

"Well, you get our girl a trousseau and warn her to keep away from the window and not to answer the doorbell, or do any telephoning, or leave the house until she has my permission. I don't expect she'll obey, so tonight when you go home have some hysterics to impress her."

"Dan, dear, I couldn't. I'm hard as a picnic egg. Did you stage your little comedy after leaving us last night?"

"I did—and it worked out exactly."

"Good gracious. Well, I'm busy. Good-by."

Nance Belden's personalities were a source of keen professional interest to Lanny, who regretted that for the present Doctor Burt was unable to share her observations with her. She had, as yet, had no opportunity for ascertaining anything regarding the girl's past history, but she had a suspicion that Nance had had advantages superior to most girls.

Her hands were the very first thing (with the exception of her poor wrecked nose) that Lanny had noticed. They were soft, shapely, small and well kept, decidedly not the hands of a factory girl. While her vocabulary was a trifle "salty," running at times to the idiom of the ill bred and ignorant, her voice was soft, with well bred intonations. Her clothing, on the occasion of her visit to Stephen Burt's office, had been, in Lanny's judgment, in splendid taste; rich but not flashy, up to the mode but not beyond it. Then, too, Nance had a slow, leisurely walk, she knew how to enter a room, she was sure of herself at all times without display assurance. To Lanny, the girl, in his abandoned moments, appeared to be amateurish, a bit of a showoff, unreal.

Thus far she had observed the girl only in this showoff phase of her personality. She was amazed, therefore, on coming home from the office after her conversation with McNamara, to find her a complete changeling. As she entered the house she caught the odor of cooking, and going into the kitchen, she discovered Nance, with one of Lanny's kitchen aprons on her, preparing dinner.

"Good evening, Lanny dear," she saluted her hostess. "It occurred to me it must be a very great trial to you, coming home night after night from the office, tired, and having to prepare dinner for yourself. I'm sure you're too tired most of the time to prepare more than a very sketchy meal, and that isn't good for you." She smiled. "So I thought I'd have a nice dinner for you."

"Now, I call that real sweet, Nance."

"My name isn't Nance, Lanny. It's Penelope."

"Penelope what?"

"Penelope Gatlin. Silly old Lanny, how could you forget?"

"You've placed your finger on my dread secret, Penelope. When I'm tired my memory fails me."

Lanny knew that during the day a psychological door had opened and Nance Belden, otherwise personality B, the abnormal, had walked through it and emerged Penelope Gatlin, or personality A, the normal. Also, she knew now that Penelope Gatlin probably had more or less amnesia for her former personality as Nance Belden. Lanny had heard Doctor Burt discuss such rare cases and she glowed with pride in the knowledge that at least he had secured a perfect specimen.

"I decided we wouldn't have broiled lamb chops, Lanny," the girl went on brightly, "so I've made a ragout."

"You mean, in good old Americanese, you've concocted an Irish stew."

"You're so amusing, Lanny. A stew, of course. The difference between a stew and a ragout is entirely geographic. A ragout in France, an Irish stew in the United States."

"Have you lived in France?"

"Eight years, Lanny. Went to school in Switzerland and learned French there."

"Are your people French?"

"I think I was there alone." The girl appeared puzzled. "I don't remember my mother, but I had a father. He was such a dear, but he's dead."

"Were you happy there?"

"No, I was perfectly miserable."

"Why?"

"Because my father wasn't with me. We'd been such pals."

"But you must have lived with somebody."

"There was Laurette, the cook, and Babette, the maid."

"Did you graduate?"

"No, I left school when father died. He was killed in a motor accident en route to Europe. I've always had a feeling he was coming over to see his Penelope. He loved me very much, Lanny. He was adorable. He used to tell me that I was all that made his life bearable. Somebody—I forgot who—told me he wasn't my real father, that I was a foundling he adopted. I wouldn't believe that at first, but when I read his will I knew it was so."

"What sort of woman was his wife—or did he have one?"

"I haven't the slightest idea, but I remember the will stated very positively that he had settled with her, that she had accepted the settlement in full satisfaction of her dower rights, and he made my income from the trust just sufficient to support me decently until I should come of age. He said in his will that he did this not because of any lack of affection for me, but because if he made me an excessive allowance, his divorced wife would have control of it during my minority. He must have despised her."

"Well, if she could have control of your income during your minority, she must have been your adopted mother."

"The practical Lanny reasoned. "And you must have lived with her following the divorce. That's why you didn't see your father in Europe. You must have been there with your foster mother, Laurette, the cook, and Babette, the maid, argue an establishment. Do you remember everything that has happened to you since that day Dan McNamara brought you to Doctor Burt's office?"

"Perfectly."

"Ever have funny thoughts about it?"

The girl stared at her shrewdly.

"How strange that you should ask that question, Lanny. I do have funny thoughts. Sometimes I'm horrified at the memory and could die of shame; at other times it seems perfectly all right, but those are the times when I've been nervous and sleepless; sometimes I think there's something wrong with me, because people often refer to me as Nance Belden and to things I've done and which I know very well I haven't done. And yet it seems to me sometimes as if I had—just a writhing of memory, like an old dream. But still I'm strong and healthy."

"But a little given to spells of nervousness?"

"I'm moody." The girl seemed interested in herself to an unusual degree. "Some days I like to do things that are perfectly intolerable to me on other days. Some days I'm so democratic I could go out to dinner with a garbage man—other times I can't bear to be with anybody but nice people." She sighed and turned to inspect her savory ragout. "I wish I knew what I wanted in life and I wish I knew somebody that wanted me. Of course I can pay my way through life, but it's terrible to be lonely, Lanny."

She faced Lanny again. "Now, when I decided to cast myself on your hospitality, Lanny, it seemed to me the most natural thing in the world to do. But today I'm covered with confusion. I've deliberately imposed myself upon your peace and privacy."

"Listen here, Penny, my dear. You aren't the only lonely woman in this world. Believe it or not, the first spring buttercup isn't a bit more welcome in old lady Lanning's house than you are."

The lost one beamed upon her. "I believe that Lanny. Oh, Lanny, when I'm happy I'm so happy and when I'm wretched I'm so wretched."

"You think too much about that nose of yours, my poor child."

The girl's hand flew to that organ (automatically, Lanny thought) as if she would hide it. "Isn't it terrible?" she quavered. "I'm so ugly nobody can ever love me."

Unique "Primrose" Rug to Crochet

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This rag rug measures 42 inches and requires about three pounds of material to finish. It appears to be made of six squares each of a different size, with the horizontal positions alternating. Work is started with the center square about 5 inches in diameter. Triangles are then crocheted on the four sides of inner square forming the second square. Continue same way for third, fourth and fifth squares. The sixth square is the same size as fifth square and therefore requires smaller triangles on sides than the others. Colors should be so arranged that center is in light shades of yellow, while outer triangles represent the petals of flowers, and may be shaded in color desired. This can be made into a very attractive and unique rug, depending very much on the color scheme used.

This is one of the twenty-six crocheted and braided rugs illustrated with instructions in Grandmother Clark's rug book No. 25. Detailed instructions are given in this book for the "Primrose" rug, and if you are interested, send 15c to our Rug Department and we will send it to you by mail.

"Check, Please"

A certain prominent female cinema star was asked to make a speech of acceptance in receiving a check in behalf of the stage relief fund. The chairman of the meeting introduced her and she was greeted with generous applause. When things had quieted down she smiled demurely and then blurted out, "Where's the check?"

Movement to Preserve Totem Poles of Indians

One result of the opening up of the further reaches of Canada is that the old primitive life of the Indians is fast disappearing, and with it their customs, traditions, and folklore. An effort is now being made to preserve the family trees, commonly known as totem poles, of the various tribes. These ancient heirlooms carry the tribal histories of more than 100,000 Indians.

It was the custom among the red Indians for each tribe to choose an animal to represent them, and thus was born the science of totemism. The carved poles show every sort of animal from lizards to lions, and it is through these that the various families and tribes can be recognized, as well as the periods when they flourished.

Hundreds of totem poles are being collected, some from as far out as the lonely Beaver island, in Hardy bay, an old trading post of the Hudson's Bay company. One of the most famous stands in Jasper National park. It is 65 feet long, and the work of carving it occupied three years.—London Tit-Bits.

When danger of frost is past, place plant, dirt and band in the ground and it will produce much earlier than usual. No transplanting, no exposed roots, no set back. The bands will tend to protect the plants from cut worms and will rot away during the season. FARMERS VOTE ON WHEAT CONTROL PROGRAM

Questions arise as to the logic and the feasibility of farmers balancing the program of production to their consumption needs in a manner comparable to that practiced by industry over the past centuries. It seems there are no fundamental differences. Whatever the occasion may be that reduces the market demand for the products of industry such industry adjusts its production to those consumptive demands. "If there are logical reasons for industry's doing so and logical reasons for agriculture's not doing likewise, we have not heard them offered," says Farm Advisor Barrett.

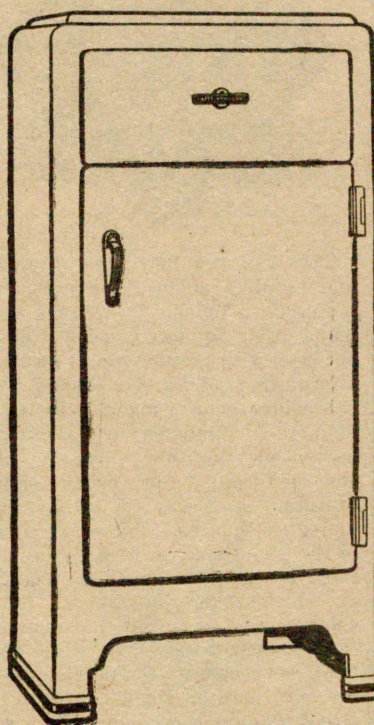

If there are those who feel that our American farmers are untrue to their responsibility of producing food for our people, it seems to us they are not advised of the facts or are unfair in their conclusions.

During the World War the farmers gave up the cultivation of wheat in foreign countries as they entered into warfare. The price of agricultural products raised materially and our American farmers were induced by way of high prices and through very definite patriotic appeal to raise more agricultural products since "food would win the war." About 65 million acres of American land was brought into cultivation.

Following the War, foreign countries reverted to the production of agricultural goods. Our exports of wheat have dropped from something near 3 hundred million bushels to only 33 million bushels in 1934. It is this loss of market that seems to make it necessary for our farmers to reduce production exactly the same as the loss of market on tractors has lead the International Harvester Company to reduce its production by 80 per cent and discharge their labor to the extend of 70 per cent.
